About Shopping for Guatemalan Textiles

Guatemala is a shopping paradise for textile lovers and collectors. "Traje Maya," the colorful and intricate traditional Mayan style of clothing, combines weaving and the use of symbolism. It includes: the hand-embroidered huipil – a loose fitting tunic-like blouse; the woven corte – a large piece of cloth wrapped around the woman's waist as a skirt; the faja – a wide, elaborately embroidered belt used to hold the skirt in place; and the tocoyal – an intricately woven hair wrap. Over the centuries, towns and regions have developed their own distinct weaving patterns and color palettes. Today, international designers seek vintage hand embroidered pieces of Guatemala's indigenous textile art to repurpose into soft furnishings and fashion accessories.

"We had a lovely time. I liked that we stayed two nights at the hotels instead of packing up every morning and leaving. It made for a more relaxing trip."
